Vernal pools provide excellent breeding grounds for many aquatic species because of the absence of (hungry) fish. Several species of frogs, species that depend on vernal pools for their continued existence include wood frogs, spring peepers, toads, spotted salamanders and other. Field biologists have identified more than 700 species in the northeastern United States that rely on these temporary habitats.